

Hilary Smith is Assistant Professor in the History Department at the University of Denver, where she teaches a wide range of classes on imperial and modern Chinese history as well as the history of medicine, health, and disease. Her research examines changing understandings of disease in Chinese society, and relationships between diet and health as Chinese doctors and patients have understood them. Before coming to DU she taught as Assistant Professor of History at Dickinson College and at Meredith College. She holds an M.Phil. in History and Philosophy of Science from Cambridge University and an M.A. and Ph.D. in History and Sociology of Science from the University of Pennsylvania.
